

Internal Audits

Internal auditors once focused on evaluating compliance with an organization's policies and procedures. Today, internal auditors do much more, from identifying risks to developing risk management protocols and analyzing processes in search of greater efficiencies. These added demands are a result of the transformation of the workplace from paper-based to digital, ever-increasing regulations and the speed at which business changes. Now more than ever, organizations need to make certain their internal processes are adequately and efficiently addressing these challenges and reducing risk.

The internal audit function is the place to start.....

Who Benefits from an Outsourced Internal Audit?

An outsourced internal audit function can benefit organizations of all sizes. Even if they have no regulatory requirement to do so, many organizations add an internal audit department or outsource or co-source the function as they grow. It makes good business sense.

Who Can benefit?

- ✓ Organizations seeking a cost-effective alternative to hiring, training and retaining internal auditors
- ✓ Organizations seeking the expertise and objectivity of outside consultants
